 7. Margaret Theresa Logan - born circa 1863
 8. Mrs D.J. McCarthy - born circa 1865
 9. Miss Etta Logan - born circa 1866

NOTES ; Mrs Lillian Logan of 223 Lee St. Peterborough confirmed that George Logan had four sisters; Helen Veronica, Margaret Theresa, Mrs D.J. McCarthy and Miss Etta Logan . She mentioned that George also had a brother named James. Letter dated 3 June, 1993

It is assumed by the researcher that since Esther, Patrick and Catherine Logan are buried at the same cemetery as James & Mary Ann Logan, that they are indeed their children.

An account of James Logan's visit to Douro Township in 1836. Notes of a Journey through Canada, the United States, and the West Indies (Edinburgh, 1838), pp. 44-46).

Later added to the 474 page book " Valley of the Trent" ,edited by Edwin C. Guillet, and published by the Champlain Society for the Government of Ontario, University of Toronto Press, 1957 , pages 365- 366.

" A VISIT TO DOURO TOWNSHIP - 1836 "

Next morning, at six, we reached Coburg, which is a hundred and seventy miles distant from Brockville. The fare from Montreal to Prescott was one pound, ten shillings, and from the latter place to Coburg one pound and five shillings.

Having hired a horse from Mr. Strong of the American Hotel, near the pier, I joined Mr. Thomson and a Mr. Hickston, an Irishman, whom we met at the hotel, and started for Peterborough. About a mile from Coburg, which, like most of the places on this route, is a neat small town, is the county-hall and jail, a rather handsome stone building. We passed several well cultivated farms and saw a number of excellent fields of wheat and oats. The road, however, was very bad, there being no stones on it and numberless ruts. About eighteen miles from Coburg we came to a clearing in the forest, which is an Irish settlement, and dined at a small inn. Farther on were several farms on which were good crops. Peterborough, which is thirty-five miles from Coburg, is very romantically situated on a rising ground overlooking the river Otanabe, which runs into Rice Lake. After remaining there a few hours I crossed the river by a ferry-boat which the current carries across, it being attached to a wheel running along a rope stretched over the river, and arrived at Mr. S. Cunningham's, where I staid all night.

1. Joseph Graham's Tavern, now Bailieboro.

I remained in the Newcastle district nine days, principally in the township of Douro, where several of my friends were settled. One day I called on Mr. Traill, whose lady has published an account of Canada, and another day went with Mr. Carnegie to a logging-bee at his neighbour F.'s. There were about six acres to log, and he had collected about twenty of his neighbours, or their servants, as those who could not work were obliged to find substitutes. There were five yokes of oxen, and generally four, but sometimes only three, men to yoke, with a boy to drive. To the yoke over the necks of the oxen is fastened a long chain with a hook at the end, and this chain is put round a log, which is then dragged to the pile. Two of my friends, myself, and a servant were attached to one of the yokes, which was driven by a boy. When the logs, which vary from ten to fifteen feet in length and from one to two and a half in diameter, were brought to the pile we laid them on in a proper manner. After the first layer was arranged the rest of the logs were hoisted on with handspikes; the heaps vary from four to five feet in height, and are not made too large so as to burn with facility. This is a very laborious part of the operation, especially when the logs are heavy and if they should slip you are in danger of getting your leg broken or even of losing your life. We worked hard all day from nine, and logged about three acres. At one we had dinner in the barn, masters and servants together without distinction. Two young Englishmen were present but did not assist, and were therefore laughed at. They disliked the country after three years' trial and were on their way home. In the evening we had a dance and were otherwise agreeably entertained until one in the morning, when we walked home, but were entangled in a wood where we groped about two hours although the distance we had to go was only half a mile. On another occasion I visited Lake Clear, where three of us lay in a deserted shantie, the smallest description of log-house, resembling in shape a pig-stye; baked our bread and roasted potatoes. The scenery of this lake is very beautiful, and its numerous wooded islands, its romantic banks, and dense forests, inhabited by woodpeckers and other gaudy birds, wolves, and squirrels merit a more extended encomium.
